Elder of the month: Victor Jones

"These days, it seems more parents than children are running away from home."

No one seems to doubt that we face difficult problems today. Where can one find the solutions to the problems of crime, immorality, teen pregnancy, and a hundred others? Will another government program bring about prosperity, morality, literacy, and happiness? Should one blame all problems on bad government? Will all problems be solved if the voters "throw the rascals out?"

Absolutely not. God did not begin His creation of this world by providing a stable government for mankind, but by creating a stable home. God created one man, and from that man he created one woman. According to Jesus, these two he joined together as one, and what God joined together, man should not put asunder (Matthew 19:6). By abandoning marriage, the most fundamental of God's gifts to mankind has been abandoned.

The answers to our most difficult problems are not to be found in better governments, but in better homes. While single parenthood is often not the fault of the single parent, God has ideally provided two parents. If one chooses to fail to form or dissolve a nuclear family, it is no surprise that raising children is difficult.

God's way is always better. Our community will only be improved by returning to it.
